

PROJECT FREE-DOOM!

An address by the Hon. Horace A. Greenbauer to the U.S. Senate Appropriations Committee

"We need smarter bombs
to neutralize our enemies
'n guarantee liberty.

We need a bomb for each citizen to defend our values
'n keep our country free.

Let's all work together
so our nation
can enjoy a stronger economy.

Let's demonstrate that we aren't afraid of attacking others to protect our GNP!

Therefore Honorable Congressmen
– and dishonorable comrades as well –
I encourage you to vote for this resolution:

‘Bomb the hell out ahh anyone defying us.’

It'll make our pockets even thicker & give our enemies one sure taste ahh hell."

Ted: Does this type of cynicism help anybody?

Tim: Well, I think of satire as a harmless way of venting anger.

Kris: (nodding) I regard it as a cautionary message about how absurd political rhetoric can become.

Ted: . . . Sometimes satire seems like a poison. Other times like a medicine.

Tim: Isn't that try of many things? It boils down to when, why, and where . . .
