

Unraveling Student-Teacher Discourse: Desconstructing Some Educational Beliefs

Tim: So many discourses romp through the heads of most teachers.

Melissa: Yeah, it takes many voices to be human.

Satoru: Which voice should have ascendancy? I often wonder about that.

Liao: Perhaps the way our DNA works is a good metaphor. At any given point in time, only a small part of our genetic code is manifest. And as environmental conditions change and organisms age, different parts become expressed.

Melissa: Hmm. It almost sounds as individual will is non-existent.

Liao: Hardly - intention shapes the cycle significantly. However, when we search for single factors to explain life, the gods start to laugh . . .

- T Newfields

Begun: 1997 in Shizuoka, Japan * Finished: 2020 in Yokohama, Japan

