

INVASION TARGET:

Some thoughts on Corporate Colonialism

Imagine a country without Coca Cola or Starbucks – a land free of corporate monstrosities.

What would a world be like without Exxon or Shell?,
in which no one knew of Mitsui, Oji, or Mitsubishi?

Imagine a place without Microsoft or Monsanto & community free from Intel, Time-Warner, or AT&T.

What would a land be without Unilever or Nestle
in which labor costs were shared equitably?

Can you imagine a place where Ronald McDonald & Ronald Reagan were mere fiction or Colonel Sanders & Captain Morgan existed only in parody?

What would happen to such a place?
Why ask the obvious?

Each moment is LO$T REVENUE:
to protect corporate interests,
prompt invasion is due!!

Terri: Why is the author attacking capitalism?

Kris: (coughing) Because capitalism attacks human dignity.

Terri: (frowning) I disagree: it's the least tyrannical economic system.
Unhindered markets is what the world needs!

Tim: As Kate Raworth aptly points out, our current economic models are too myopic. We need to re-envision the role of the economy in relationship with the overall eco-sphere and society.

- T Newfields

Begun: 2003 in Nagoya, Japan Finished: 2015 in Tokyo, Japan

