

ILLUMINATION FORESEEN:
some thoughts about human potential

What we are today is but a fraction of what we could be

Our hearts have more possibilities than we have ever seen

We are flickering candles in a star-studded night

The illumination we now produce could be infinitely more bright

We are meant to shimmer strongly & shine with luminosity!

Why tinker with ephemera
when there are countless discoveries?

Rejoice as swarming moths against eternity's candlelight!

Through conscious intention be radiant & bright

Be confident,
even when it seems like night

Gwen: This poem seems to deny ephemera, yet isn't it within the nugatory that the noetic lies?

Carlos: (surprised) Huh? What planet are you from?

Orapan: I think Carlos is trying to say that many things are beyond our understanding.

Noel: (laughing). Look: lots ah people around the world are starving. Why are you are chatting about poetry?

Orapan: Well, for me poetry is a way of remembering the things that make life worth living.

Gwen: Of course, it is good try to make the world better. However, do not disparage poetry!

Noel: (cynically). Argh, this talk is useless! I think I will "make the world better" by drinking a nice cold beer!

- T Newfields

Begun: 2006 in Tokyo, Japan * Finished: 2017 in Yokohama, Taiwan

