

INTERTWINED:

A meditation on connectedness

Tim : (gazing at the image) At times I think mathematics is the highest form of beauty.

Miok : Indeed. Isn't all music, poetry, and art an elegant mathematical calculation?

Cantara : I wish things were that clean and symmetrical. Entropy is everywhere and a degree of randomness seems inevitable.

Chris : Strange as it seems, randomness contains order and seemingly "perfect order" has some randomness. What I'd like to know is why this image resembles Bratwurst . . .

Tim : Well, perhaps some a previous lifetime you were German? For some strange reason, that's what you see. Other people will see different things.

Miok : (mischievously) I, for example, see a partial Dyson sphere with a series prolate ellipsoids in a circular orbit around a neutron star. Well, does that mean I was an alien in a previous lifetime?
