

AT ISSUE:

Some problems with ethical relativism

What some call "corruption" others call opportunity.

What some consider "immoral"
others view as self-discovery.

What some label "unfair"
others see as different ways of doing things.

The issues in life
are seldom clear-cut:
each point has many facets
and from varied perspectives anything
can start to seem
like any thing:
does that se
em obscure e
no
ugh

Will: I detest this kind of moral turpitude.

Wan-Sze: Well, all morality is relative.

Will: No – at least among humans there are absolutes, but the author ignores this.

Wan-Sze: Be careful when using the word "absolute". I believe all values are contextual.

Will: I disagree. Without absolute values, we will have no moral compass.
