

The questions that matter lack easy answers.

The questions that matter laugh if people say 'I see!'

The questions that matter invite a thousand new questions.

The questions that matter are worth raising & exploring perpetually.

- Lis: This poem reminds me of a work Charles Ives composed in 1906. His Unanswered Question resonates with this poem.
- Linda: It does have a transcendentalist flavor, but isn't it a post-modernist credo?
- Ron: (impatient at the pretense) Let's drop the labels! They might help you look smart, but certainly not wise.
